

The following letter contains 438 signatures from local elected officials representing 145 towns and cities and 71.1% of public school students.

To Governor Ayotte and the General Court of New Hampshire:

Two years ago, a group of over 150 local leaders – including Mayors, City Councilors, Select Board members, and School Board members – presented a similar letter to this one during public hearings on the State budget, calling on the State of New Hampshire to increase its funding for public education in order to address well-known inequities and gaps. What that budget contained, touted as one of the biggest increases to State education aid since the Claremont decisions, was only $169 million (barely more than a 2% increase) that did not meaningfully affect the State’s share of education funding, which remains the lowest in the entire country.

This modest change has not helped reduce the downshifted tax burden faced by local property tax payers trying to support their public schools. During the legislature’s work in 2024, there were several bills aimed at reducing that burden and sending aid to districts and students that needed it the most, like students receiving special education services. Despite strong, bipartisan support in the House, these bills were killed by the Senate and failed to become law.

Meanwhile, all of us at the local level have continued working hard for our schools and communities to try and balance the needs of our students and the economic realities faced by our taxpayers. Inflation, energy costs, and unpredictable special education expenditures have put strains on our budgets, and the State has provided no relief.

The significant gap between actual expenses, which was \$21,545 per pupil during the 2023-24 school year, and average State aid, which was only \$5,148 per pupil the same year, must be closed with local property taxes. Our local property taxes cover 70% of all school revenues in the state, the highest share in the country. In all of our communities, especially those with lower property values, this means levying higher and higher tax rates just to keep up. The result is a system where one of the biggest factors in determining the opportunities available to our students, and the burden placed on the taxpayer, is local property values.

Despite record surpluses in the Education Trust Fund, excess State funds have not been used to help alleviate these disparities or provide aid to school districts. In November 2024, the Department of Education announced that there was expected to be $16 million less in the State’s Special Education Aid fund than was being requested by local districts. This fund is used to reimburse school districts for specific, state-approved services provided to students with complex and intensive needs. These students have a federally protected right to these services, and if the State does not fill in the funding shortfall, it will downshift even more onto local property tax payers.

As the legislature begins working on the biennial State budget — the single largest vehicle for school funding reform — you must take stock of the current situation communities are facing. For decades, the State has fallen short of its constitutional responsibility to fund education, losing again and again in court while downshifting increases onto local property taxes in most communities around the state. With pending decisions in the two current school funding lawsuits coming any day from the NH Supreme Court, we once again call on the Governor and New Hampshire Legislature to act.

There are a variety of policy changes that could provide significant relief to local property tax payers while boosting the funding going to school districts around the state. The 2020 Commission to Study School Funding's final report, having now gone four years without the legislature putting its findings and policy proposals into action, still presents a strong framework to build from. The work of last year's special House Sub-Committee on Education Funding also did extensive work on the bipartisan proposals that were ultimately killed in the Senate.

It is the firm belief of those signed below that well-funded, excellent public education is the most important asset for the future of New Hampshire. About 85% of New Hampshire children attend public schools, meaning an increase in State aid would help most children in the state access new opportunities while also providing property tax relief for most taxpayers. This is a win-win and promotes the health of the New Hampshire economy by investing in the next generation and making our communities more attractive for businesses and families.

We all work hard to balance providing critical services to our communities while not increasing property taxes beyond what people can afford. The current budget process presents a new opportunity for the Governor and Legislature to work together on finding a solution to the funding challenges faced by so many communities in our state. A school funding solution ensures every student, no matter where they live, has access to the best possible public education, while also creating real relief for taxpayers. Doing nothing, while not only violating the New Hampshire Constitution, will only serve to exacerbate the existing disparities that exist in our state, driving local property taxes higher and keeping opportunities away from our students. The future of our state, and our communities, depends on the State contributing to a well-funded public education system.
